BUNKOED OUT OF A DINNER.

Prearranged Scheme to Take the Conceit Out of a Fellow.

"I was one of a party of four several evenings ago," said a well-known bohe-mian, "and we were seated around a table at one of the popular restaurants down be-low Canal street. Something was said about repartee. One of the boys was very proud of his provess in this respect, and I observed that the other two were inclined to twit him about it. I did not understand exactly why the subject was broached un-til afterwards. Subsequent developments, til afterwards. Subsequent developments, however, revealed the whole plot, and the bohemian who had been boasting of his ingenuousness in making quick replies left, crestfallen. 'By the way,' said one of the gentlemen, pulling a slip of paper out of his pocket with something written on it, 'speaking of being quick-witted, I am up in the slip on a poem. I have concluded that the sir on a poem. I have concluded that I am a positive dullard, for I cannot finish it to save my life. He handed it to me and asked me to read it and write the second and concluding verse. It ran thus:

"There may be bugs in butter, And bugs in butterine,

And bugs in butterine,
Bugs in the air,
Bugs everywhere,
In everything unclean;
But there are no bugs or parasites,
Or germs, or microbes frisky,
In the choicest of all articles—
Just plain old-fashioned whisky.

Thanded the verse to the sentleman next o me, who was the vain man. He shook ils head and passed it to the fourth member of the party. Til bet the price of the supper and a bottle of wine,' said the author to the vain man, 'that our friend will write the second verse in less than ten minutes.' Til take the bet,' the vain man replied. The gentleman who held the jingle turned the paper over and began to write on the reverse side, and in less than ten minutes he handed we had been the four tenters. minutes he handed me the slip of paper, which he had scribbled the following: There are no bugs! Ach du, mein her

There are no bugs—gee whitz!
I've seen a blarsted doodle bug
A floundering in a fizz,
And katydids, and jobberwocks,

And tadpoles from the bogs; Whirring insectivorousness From miasmatic fogs.

And many things zoological,
And animalcules frisky,
And snakes galore I've often found
In plain old-fashioned whisky.'

Really, I was as much surprised as the man who had to pay for the supper and the wine, but later on I learned that his the wine, but later on I learned that his two friends had put up a job on him to crush his vanity incidentally and to fleece him out of supper and a bottle of wine. One of the boys had written the jingle for the occasion, and it worked like a charm.'

A Lesson in Detective Work. It was early morning. The rising sun had dispelled the gloom and awakened all the little birds, who forthwith began the usual row. Under the shadow of a wall at the corner of the long seaside road stood two men, one an Inspector of Police, the other a lately joined police recruit. The Inspector was treating his companion to a lesson in detective work, and explaining the science of observation and deduction which enabled a man to reason from effects to causes.

"Observe," said he, "this man approaching; on his shoulder he carries something in a long case; that is a gun; his right hand coat pocket bulges in a peculiar, knobby way, that indicates cartridges; his boots are muddy, so are the knees of his trousers. Therefore, he has been on marshland. probably duck-shooting; let us ask him."

"What ho, friend, shot anything?"
But the sportsman shakes his head, and, opening the cloth case, displays a fishing rod. As he turns to go, he produces from the right coat pocket a handful of cockles, which he offers to the Inspector.

And the recruit, striving to give practical application to the words of his superior, wonders whether the man caught the cockles with rod and line.—Tid-Bits.

Love me not, dearest, for the smile,
The tender greeting, or the wile
By which, unconscious of its road,
My soul seeks thine in its abode;
Nor say, "I love thee for thine eves." "What he, friend, shot anything?"

Nor say, "I love thee for thine eyes,"
For when death shuts them, where thy skles?
But live me for my love.

Then am I safe from all surprise, And thou above -Arthur Sherburn Hardy.

lessness that come from kidney ills, can be relieved and cured. Read what one St. Louis citizen says:

Mr. Albert Frank, Journeyman Tinner, of 408 Clark avenue, says: "Since I was 22 years of age I have been subject to attacks of kidney complaint. They mostly occurred in winter or during inclement weather, when I was always sure to catch cold, and it settled in my loins. I have been so bad that I could not work and hardly get up or down, and every move I made which brought a strain on the muscles of the back meant severe torture. In addition to the above, acute trouble with the kidney sacrotions existed. When I went to the Woiff-Wilson Drug Co's for Doan's Kidney Pills I was suffering. I don't know whether the treatment cured that particular attack, or whether it disappeared mysteriously like others had before, but I do know since I stopped the treatment there has not been a symptom of a recurrence."

THEIR BRIDAL TRIP AN UNUSUAL ONE.

Young Washington Couple Went a Thousand Miles by Sea in a Small Boat.

THEY WERE BY THEMSELVES.

Braved Storms, Lived on Fish, Prospected for Gold in Alaska, and Have Finally Got Back Home.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. Seattle, Wash. May 25.—Ray Oviatt and his girl wife, who was Mamie Gridell, have returned from their thousand-mile wedding tour in a small boat, of which they were both passengers and crew, and have settled down to housekeeping in a little cottage in Seattle.

Perhaps theirs was the queerest wedding tour that couple ever took. It was partly an elopement—except that they didn't elope until after they were married.

Ray was a sallor boy, 19 years old, and the lass that loved a sallor was 18 years old and lived down by the bay with her grand-mather.

form and laughing face. Hay taught Mamie to steer and how to let go the jib sheets in coming about while he was forward attending to the anchor.

Then when sailing out on the sound he gave her instructions in all the arts of sailor craft—how to luff quickly and ease off the sheets when struck by a flaw from sallor craft—how to luff quickly and ease off the sheets when struck by a flaw from the mountains, and how to jibe without cracking the main boom or her own head—until at last she could stand her watch alone with self-reliance.

Venus was sea-born, the Greeks said, and still she rises from the sea when man and maid appear. Puget Sound is not less beautiful than the lonlan Sea, and Venus is not the goddess of the Greeks only. She cast her witchery over the two who salled on the summer days, and then came an engagement, and the storm at home when it was announced.

Prevariant to Elone.

Preparing to Elope.

it was announced.

Preparing to Elope.

Ray's parents raged. His father used language; his mother tears.

Mamle's grandmother said not much. Only that Mamle was all she had.

Ray was under age and needed his parents' consent. But when once a girl gets the idea of marriage into her head it is there to stay.

One day when they were out on the hay: "If we could only sail on forever like this," said one.

"Why not?" said the other,
"Why not?" said both.

The next thing was to prepare. Mamie began by packing her trunk a little at a time in a hiding place which Ray had found for her. Plece by piece she transported the bits of her wardrobe that was to be her trousseau.

He at the same time commenced laying in a store of provisions.

At last the time came when the provisions were all stored in the secret hiding place. The little trousseau that Mamle had scraped together, made and pleced out, was all ready, and then one day Ray got a friend to go with him to the Courthouse and help him get the marriage license. He could not have asked for it himself.

The license obtained, there was a wait until one auspicious evening when the young couple went out for a walk, as they had often done before. Only this time there were two who went out and but one came back, if there is truth in the statement that marriage makes them one.

Storm Soon Struck Them. Everything was now ready and, taking the first favorable opportunity, they stewed their provisions and clothing on the little yacht Ultra and started, and on the little yacht Ultra and started, and on an atrange and adventurous a runaway wedding trip as ever two mortals had.
"Down the sound the voyage was uneventful," said Ray in describing the beginning of his journey, which shows how the greatest event of a man's life may full to impress him with its significance.

It was a happy, busy, nervous time for them. Mamle steered while Ray stowed the anchor and made things snug forward. Then, after he had adjusted the heavier boxes and things in the achie in the anchor and made things song forward. Then, after he had adjusted the heavier boxes and things in the cabin, he took the helm and Mamie started in on the first of her housekeeping duties, tucking and tidying things up in the cabin.

Then it was Ray's turn again to go and build the galley fire so that Mamie could cook their dinner.

By the time he had finished this the wind had increased so that Mamie was braced with all her strength to keep the helm up, and the boat was tearing through the water, throwing spray clear back to the companionway as she butted against the head seas. Before long there was work enough for both of them for it is no easy task to keep a little, short, chunky vessel headed anywhere within four points of where she ought to be, when there is a choppy sea and a flawy wind.

The darkness came on imperceptibly, the coast outline disappearing bit by bit and the shore lights taking its place, cut out now and then by the lowering clouds.

Ray went below and lit the little binnacie light that shone blood-red on the compass card.

Whale Had Fun With Them.

Whale Had Fun With Them. The evening wore on, the boat dashing from wave to wave, splashing and roaring enough to deaden all sounds, until suddenly there came from in front of them a hoarse blowing noise as of a steamboat's denly there came from in front of them a hoarse blowing noise as of a steamboat's cacape pipe.

"A whale," said Ray, and changed the course of the boat to avoid its apparent direction. Before they had sailed long, again came the noise, still ahead of them and in a new direction. Again he changed the boat's course, and then it seemed as though the whale had deliberately started in to tease them first on the port bow, then on the startoard; then, just to make them think they were safe, he would drop back and they would hear his blowing close on their quarter, close enough to make them think that a blow of his tail might reach them. Then he would drop astern, and as they thought he was leaving them, he would suddenly rush ahead and again divert them from their course.

At last the whale tired of teasing, and when he had left them the storm alone did not seem so threatening. As dawn came on the wind decreased, and the increasing light making it safe for them to run close to shore, they found a beautifully sheltered anchorage in a little inlet, or bight, with wooded shores that everhung the water.

They were now across the British line. The storm was gone, they were safe from irate parents. The world was theirs, and they were each other's, and alone.

The anchor was dropped, the sails lowered, and soon the blue smoke of the gailey fire was curling lasily around the mast before floating away through the tired atmosphere that sagged listlessly in its rest after the wild storm of the night before. No less delightful than the scenery was the sizzling sound that came from good things on the gailey stove below.

More storms followed, but by this time they were well into the inland passage, and little harbors were to be found whenever shelier was wanted. The days were ingthening with the increased northing which they were making, and days and nights both they sailed.

The Honeymoon in Alaska.

For a boat as small as theirs there was little choice as to which channel should be taken, and in most of the parts of the way ther taken, and in most of the parts of the way there were two or three courses open. Fish, halibut especially, were plentiful, and, like Alaskans, they ate fish until surfeited with the delicious, firm-meated specimens that they pulled out every day with their hooks and lines while trolling as the boat salled slowly.

and lines while troiling as the boat sailed elowly.

Here, lost to the world, they honeymooned to their hearts' content.

Ray was prospecting, and as his wife could not follow on his hard trips he built a shelter for her on the beach, and taking the little yacht would sail away across the harbor and be gone for a week at a time. Successful in love, he failed in his search for gold.

The relatives of both at home had long given them up for dead, as they found by newspaper reports which reached them.

Their homeward journey was forced upon them by the fact that they had no money, and there was no alternative. They could not live on love alone, though it had been a good part of their diet through the summer.

a good part of their diet through the summer.

The voyage homeward was tedious and uninteresting, as are all retracements. Storm succeeded storm, but they were only natural storms, and not the matrimonial kind, which are the worst to be feared. They were bashful about returning together, so when they arrived at Victoria Ray sent his wife home to her grand-mother by steamer and let her clear the coast, as it were.

KING VISITED DYING MAN.

Edward Had Not Forgotten an Old Friend.

Friend.

London, May 25.—The King's escape at the time of the accident on board the Shamrock II last Wednesday has, if anything, added to his popularity. With what tact his Majesty preserves the happy relation between himself and his subjects can be judged from an instance that occurred this week.

Colonel the Honorabie Charles Eliot, whose friendship with the King dated from the time of the royal visit to America, when Colonel Eliot acted as the mentor of the then Prince of Wales, lay dying at the Sports Club.

Colonel Eliot had not had any intimate relations with the King for many years, but his Majesty, hearing of the soldier's condition, immediately drove to the club, got out and inquired sympathetically for his former friend, and those visits were continued daily until Colonel Eliot died.

Princess Christian also called at the club, for Eliot was formerly a member of her household. She walked straight to his room, said a few words and kissed the dying man's hand.
